Ranchers say imported beef does not insure cheaper burgers

Brooke Blach
Reid Newspapers Capitol Correspondent

President Donald Trump has opened the door to nearly 700 million pounds of cheaper foreign beef in an effort to cut ground beef prices. Whether consumers will see those savings at the grocery store or drive-thru is less certain.

Trump's Aug. 26 order allows up to 220 million pounds, or 100,000 metric tons, of lean beef trimmings to enter the United States each month for three months, beginning Sept. 1. The White House said the imported beef will be combined with U.S. beef to produce ground beef.

The administration expects the additional supply to increase projected U.S. beef supplies by roughly 10% and "deliver economic relief to American consumers," according to a White House fact sheet. But even if processors pay less for imported beef, the order does not require grocery stores or restaurants to lower the prices consumers pay.

The administration said it has paired the temporary imports with longer-term efforts aimed at rebuilding the U.S. cattle herd. Agriculture Secretary Brooke Rollins announced the Ranchers First Initiative Aug. 31, which includes a new insurance option intended to reduce the financial risk for ranchers who keep young female cattle, known as heifers, for breeding rather than selling them. Retaining those animals allows producers to grow their herds over time.

American Farmers & Ranchers/Oklahoma Farmers Union President Scott Blubaugh said the initiative is a step in the right direction but argued producers need longer-term certainty to rebuild their herds.

"Importing additional foreign beef is not the solution and could discourage ranchers from retaining heifers," Blubaugh, the sixth generation of his family operating a ranch near Tonkawa, Oklahoma, said. "We encourage the president to reconsider these initiatives."

He urged the Trump administration to instead extend the Livestock Risk Protection endorsement from two years to at least three to five years. He also warned that increasing beef imports could work against efforts to encourage ranchers to retain cattle.

The administration continued rolling out measures aimed at supporting ranchers Friday, when Trump signed an executive order directing federal agencies to review policies affecting ranchers and take steps to promote their financial viability and market access.

The executive order also directs the Department of Agriculture to review whether mandatory country-of-origin labeling for beef can be established and tells federal agencies to ensure food production and supply policies benefit consumers through lower prices "to the maximum extent possible."

Blubaugh also called for mandatory country-of-origin labeling for foreign beef and cattle.

"American producers raise the highest-quality beef in the world, and consumers want to buy American beef first," Blubaugh said. "Clear labeling is essential to support American producers and ensure consumers know where their beef comes from."

Trump's order does not reverse the temporary increase in beef imports that began Sept. 1.

The U.S. Cattlemen's Association warned Aug. 27 that additional imports could put downward pressure on cattle prices without producing immediate savings for consumers.

"Producers are already starting to feel the effects of this action in the markets this week, which were down across the board for multiple days," said Justin Tupper, the cattlemen's association president who operates a ranch in South Dakota.

Black angus graze on the ranch operated by Scott Blubaugh near Tonkawa, Oklahoma.

Cattle and calves on feed across the U.S. were at a 75 year low in January, according to the U.S. Farm Bureau, which said herds are down about 300,000 head from the same time in 2025. Tupper said weaker cattle prices come at a time when ranchers are deciding whether to retain cattle and rebuild their herds, decisions that can affect beef supplies years into the future.

Whether lower beef costs will eventually reach consumers is less clear. Wholesale beef and veal prices fell 4.1% between June and July, according to the National Restaurant Association, which analyzes federal producer price data. During the same month, prices for limited-service meals, including fast-food and fast-casual restaurants, rose 0.4%, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The figures measure different parts of the food market and do not show how much beef costs affected restaurant prices. But they illustrate that falling wholesale beef prices do not necessarily translate immediately into lower menu prices.

Imported beef also passes through several steps before reaching consumers. USDA says lean imported beef is commonly mixed with fattier U.S. beef to produce ground beef before being sold to grocery stores and restaurants.

Meat processors are dealing with their own price pressures. Tyson Foods recently lowered its fiscal 2026 outlook, citing high cattle costs and a tight U.S. cattle supply that has put pressure on its beef operations. Tyson did not tie its revised outlook to Trump's import policy, but its results illustrate how changing cattle prices can affect processors before beef reaches consumers.

The White House argues the temporary imports can lower consumer costs without significantly affecting the broader cattle market. The administration said the additional beef is expected to compete primarily with beef from cull cows, which is commonly used for ground beef, rather than beef from cattle raised for steaks and other higher-value cuts. The expanded imports began Sept. 1, making it too early to know whether the additional supply will translate into lower prices for consumers.
