Deliveries

Brad Wittrock was the first to speak up and read a letter he had prepared.

Wittrock said he didn't like the fact that Evans had floated the idea before making it board official.

"It puts board members in a spot of agreeing with something we don't support or have egg on our face for creating an issue," Wittrock said.

Wittrock said the feedback he had initially received from school staff members didn't necessarily support the notion of relaxing the rule.

"There are a number of issues with Valentine's Day deliveries explained to me including creating a safety issue for our children with all the people in and out of the buildings, loss of instruction time, the possibility of damaging or breaking gifts resulting in upset parents and kids, spreading staff thin trying to oversee this effort, and the staff would have to deal with any fallout (social/emotional impact) pertaining to some kids that did not receive anything," Wittrock went on to say.

"I completely understand the desire to support local business. I would love to send my kids a gift to brighten their day, but not at the expense of other children who may not have anyone or their parents may be in a position that this is not an option. As such, I intend to still support the local business by having a gift for them when they get home. Every person would still have this option."

Board President Mike Copeland was on the board when the move was made to stop the deliveries several years ago.

"There was a reason we canceled it and there still is a reason," Copeland said. "In my mind, even though I support the local businesses just like everybody else, I'm more concerned about the kids who don't get something on Valentine's Day than I am about the kids who get something on Valentine's Day."

"So while I don't agree with everything Brad said, I do agree that I don't think that we need to open it because it really, it falls on those five back there (the district's principals at the back of the room) and the support staff on trying to do it."

Bill Reit also said the social impact would outweigh the positives.

"I've spoken to some teachers, some staff members, and they say, you should see the looks on those kids' faces," he said in regards to children who don't receive anything.

"It's no fault of the parent if they can't afford it," adding that teachers have told him they're the ones who usually have to deal with the upset children."

Discussion lasted for several minutes on the subject. Once it ended, no board member made a motion one way or another on the agenda item.

After the meeting, Evans told the KT FP that he respected the issues brought up by the board and also understood the issue with the early messaging to the community.

"There should have been nothing sent to the chamber of commerce about this matter until after a vote occurred," he said.

come, especially on acreage that is supporting livestock.

Randall Varnell, manager of Wheeler Brothers Elevator in Kingfisher, reported a total of .9 inch at the Kingfisher Elevator and .55 inch at the mega elevator.

"We needed it," Varnell said.

Maureen Seay Kordis of Kingfisher went to heaven to be with the Lord Jesus on Wednesday, Jan. 7, 2026.

Maureen was born in Ardmore on Nov. 18, 1935, to Navy Captain Lon and Maurine (Seay) Johnson.

At the age of 6 on Dec.

7, 1941, she lived near the Pearl Harbor Naval Base when it was attacked by Japan.

Maureen had positive memories of the many places she lived growing up.

She spent time in Cody, Wyo., with her maternal grandparents.

She graduated from Guthrie High School in 1953.

She earned an associate's degree and worked as a secretary at the Noble Institute and later at Tinker Air Force Base.

Maureen met Herbert Kordis at a Tall Club dance. It was love at first sight.

They were married Aug. 24, 1968, and established a home near Cashion.

Together they worked on the farm and raised two children.

She always loved animals, especially horses and dogs. Her hobbies included sewing, gardening and reading.

Maureen was preceded in death by her parents; her brother, Charles Johnson; her sister, Florence Turner; and her nanny and longtime family friend, Effie Heil.

She is survived by her husband Herb; daughter, Kim DeGust; and husband Robert; son, Michael Kordis and wife Kendra; grandsons Stephen Hurlbut and wife Silvia, David Hurlbut and numerous nieces and nephews.
