

Oklahoma teens can enroll in free vaping cessation program

Sheila Stogsdill

A free Instagram-based cessation support program aimed at helping Oklahoma teens and young adults to quit vaping is now open. Enrollment for Quit the Hit, ends Jan. 16, 2026. The program is funded by the Tobacco Settlement Endowment Trust and focuses on teens and young adults aged 13-24 looking to quit vaping. The tailored five-week experience connects participants with professional quit coaches and peers through moderated group chats on Instagram. The program includes daily educational content, interactive group challenges, and tools to build confidence and coping skills for long-term success.

“Teens today are surrounded by messages that make vaping seem normal. Programs like Quit the Hit provide a positive space on social media where young people can connect, share their challenges, and learn how to take control of their health,” said Julie Bisbee, TSET executive director. Since its launch, Quit the Hit has empowered many Oklahoma youth to quit vaping. Participants praise the program’s relatable approach and supportive community. More than 20% of Oklahoma high school students report using vaping products. Nicotine use by youth can disrupt areas of the brain responsible for attention, learning, and impulse control, with effects lasting into adulthood. Youth e-cigarette use is also linked to increased risks of depression, anxiety, and addiction to other substances. Youth interested in quitting can enroll at QuitTheHitNow.com. Spots are limited, and a waitlist is available. There will be a second enrollment period from March 2, 2026, through April 30, 2026. Other Resources Quit the Hit, teens aged 13–17 can access My Life, My Quit, a free, confidential one-on-one quit program offering live text support, web chat, and phone coaching. To enroll, visit MyLifeMyQuit.com or text “Start My Quit” to 36072. TalkAboutTobacco.com, a resource from Tobacco Stops With Me, a program of TSET, offers tools and tips to help parents and caregivers talk to kids about the dangers of vaping.

Route 66: America in asphalt and adventure

Stretching from Chicago to Los Angeles, Route 66 has long been more than a highway—it’s a lens through which to see the story of America itself. As travelers move from small-town diners to neon-lit motels, from rolling plains to desert landscapes, the road becomes a microcosm of the nation: Its triumphs, struggles, and contradictions all visible in miniature. Along the route, towns thrive or fade, mirroring broader economic shifts. The Dust Bowl of the 1930s sent thousands west along Route 66 in search of work and survival, and Steinbeck immortalized this migration in The Grapes of Wrath, portraying the highway as both a path to opportunity and a corridor of hardship. Even now, remnants of that era—abandoned gas stations, old motels, and vintage signage—tell stories of resilience in the face of adversity. Human interactions along the road reflect America’s enduring spirit. Strangers become allies, roadside communities rally around travelers, and quirky attractions reveal creativity and optimism thriving even in hardship. Route 66 captures the tension between promise and reality: It is both a literal journey across states and a symbolic journey through social and economic landscapes. Today, tourists drive the “Mother Road” chasing nostalgia, adventure, and a glimpse of the American story. From Dust Bowl migrants to modern-day road trippers, Route 66 remains a mirror of the country itself, showing how communities endure, adapt, and keep moving forward—one mile at a time.
