An award worth celebrating!

Collinsville's young readers are #1 AGAIN!

Now THIS is something worth celebrating!

Rebecca Harrison, Manager of the Collinsville Library, joined the celebration at a recent Collinsville City Commission meeting as she presented Mayor Larry Shafer with the Tulsa County Library Mayoral Reading Challenge award.

The town or city with the highest participation percentage relative to its youth population wins the title. Collinsville had over 34 percent participation.

For the SECOND YEAR IN A ROW, Collinsville has earned the honor after more of its young readers participated and read more than any other Tulsa City-County Library location!

Mayor Shafer was proud to accept the award on behalf of the City, but this award really belongs to the young people who spent their summer turning pages, discovering new stories and proving once again that Collinsville LOVES to read!

What a wonderful accomplishment for our youngsters and what a great reflection of the community. The City also wants to recognize Rebecca and the Collinsville Library staff for the work they do to make the Summer Reading Program fun, engaging and something the children want to be a part of year after year.

Congratulations, Collinsville readers! You brought the Mayor's Reading Challenge Award home for the second year in a row, and everyone couldn't be more proud of you!
